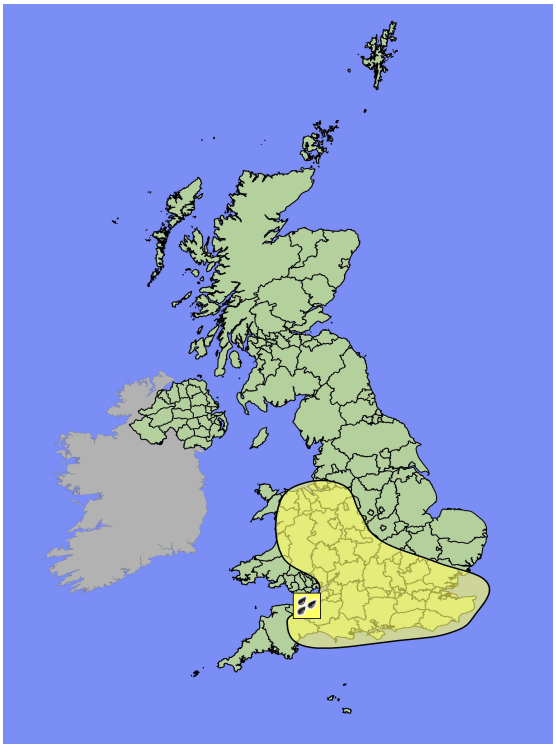
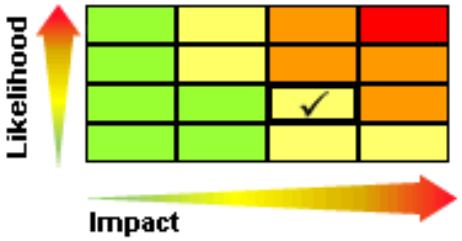
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Outbreaks of rain on a slow moving occlusion through central parts tonight will become re-invigorated tomorrow as a small scale upper vortex transfers SE over England and Wales. Rain rates of up to 10-15 mm in the hour are possible and some places may see 20-30 mm in a 2-3 hr period. The risk of localised flooding is highest during the afternoon.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 00:05 on Fri, 20th Jul 2012 until 22:00 on Fri, 20th Jul 2012

Heavy showers may become slow moving and merge to give 1-2 hours of heavy rain with a risk of isolated thunder. There is a small risk of localised surface water flooding, particularly in urban areas. As with all showery events many places will miss the heaviest rain and some may stay dry all day.
The public should be aware of the risk of localised disruption, particularly to transport during peak periods.
